

Dear Reader,

This week, after a long sojourn, our attention turned back onto Somalia with discussion of a possible piracy resurgence and how to differentiate themselves.

Elsewhere, Libyan rebels have reopened two oil terminals under their control, and another large cache of drugs has been discovered in distribution.

Don't forget to visit our website www.marsecreview.com for many more nuggets of news.

If you have a friend or colleague that would like to receive our newsletter, please forward this email to them with

Have an enjoyable weekend,

Catch up on some of this weeks stories:

Libyan rebels reopen two oil terminals

Two Libyan oil terminals have reopened, after rebels agreed partially to lift their oil blockade in

Somali piracy resurgence in 2015?

A White Paper published today by Dryad Maritime has outlined how a shift in US foreign policy

CTF 150 seizes 130kg heroin off Tanzanian coast

Her Majesty's Canadian Ship (HMCS) Regina has seized over 130kg of high-grade heroin off the Indian Ocean.

ID cards prove fishermen are not pirates

Somali fishermen have been issued with official ID cards to help distinguish them from pirates,

Illicit money flows experts shot in Somalia

The two men, who often worked together, were on mission in Somalia to offer technical advice

Maritime Security Review